THE COUNTY INSTITUTE IN SESSION

Teachers Are Attending To The Number of One Hundred.

LECTURE FOR TO-NIGHT.

Exercises To-day Will Be Appropriate To the Natal
Day.

The city is full of pedagogues. The occasion is the opening of the Christian County Teachers' Institute, under the management of the county superintendent, Miss Katie McDaniel. The meetings will continue through the week up to and including Friday afternoon.

The institute was called to order yesterday morning and after organization the teachers present enrolled their names. This will, perhaps, be the fullest attendance in the history of the institute.

It is estimated that over one hundred teachers will attend the sessions of the institute.

Yesterday morning the county superintendent made a few general remarks, which were full of logic and instruction to all in attendance, showing Miss McDaniel's peculiar fitness for the position which she has filled so admirably for the past twelve years.

She was followed by an introductory address by the instructor of the institute, Dr. R. N. Roark.

The exercises of the afternoon consisted of a symposium on school management, led by the instructor, and a discussion of the normal school question in Kentucky.

This morning will be recognized as a national day. The court room will be decorated with the national colors, patriotic songs will be sung, and the 4th otherwise observed.

The court room will be packed to-night to hear Dr. Roark's great address, entitled "Face to Face with Here and Now." All who fail to hear this will miss one of the best addresses ever delivered in the city. The full program of the institute will be found elsewhere in this paper.

BATTLE WITH BULL.

Infuriated Animal Was Finally Shot Dead.

Alf Gant, colored, of Gainesville, was attacked by a bull yesterday and had a narrow escape from death. The animal hurled Gant into the air and when he fell to the ground the attack was renewed. The negro finally succeeded in getting the bull by the horns, and, holding on with one hand, he shot the animal dead. Gant sustained some very bad bruises.

SECRETARY JOHN HAY PASSES AWAY.

Unexpected End of His Physical Break-Down.

FUNERAL TO-MORROW.

Was America's Foremost
Diplomat and a Man of Ability and Culture.

Newbury, N. H., July 1.—The body of Secretary of State John Hay, whose unexpected death early today has caused sorrow through the land and evoked expressions of sympathy and regret the world over, will be interred in Washington Wednesday.

Just one week ago to-night the Secretary arrived at this village from Washington, wearied with the cares of State and anticipating a long summer's rest. Tonight the same launch in which Mr. Hay made the short trip from Newbury conveyed relatives of Mrs. Hay to the cottage where they brought sympathy and help to the stricken woman and her only son. In that week came first the news that the Secretary had been seized with a sudden and alarming attack calling for expert medical treatment, then that he had passed through the early stages of recovery and had reached a condition promising in every respect ultimate recovery. Then the crushing blow fell.

Death was caused by pulmonary embolism, according to Dr. Scudder. The patient did not suffer greatly in his last moments. Aside from great difficulty in breathing there was no struggle. Stimulants were ineffective. The Secretary lapsed into unconsciousness and seemed to fall asleep at last.

Born in Indiana.

John Hay was born in Salem, Ind., October 8, 1838. He was graduated from Brown university and settled in Illinois as a lawyer, but has been in political life since the outbreak of the war between the states. In 1861 he went to Washington as one of President Lincoln's private secretaries, acting also as his aide-de-camp. He served under Generals Hunter and Gilmore with the rank of major and adjutant general. He was subsequently in the United States diplomatic service and was stationed at various times at Paris, Vienna and Madrid. The last diplomatic position held by Mr. Hay was that of ambassador to England, to which he was appointed in 1897.

Secretary of State.

In the following year, '98, Hay was made secretary of state. He was reappointed as secretary of state by President Roosevelt and was serving in this capacity at the time of his death.

Mr. Hay was a literary man of considerable repute. His principal literary reputation rests on a book of poems called "Pike County Ballads," and a life of Abraham Lincoln. He wrote also a book of travels and other works.

PEMBROKE LIBRARY

Received Good Sum as Result of Contest.

The fiddlers' contest at Pembroke Friday night was a big success in all respects. The performers played to a packed house and a good sum was realized. The entertainment was given for the benefit of the Pembroke public school library. In the big contest Hopkinsville won over White Plains. Numerous prizes were awarded during the evening. Each player from here received one or more.

SECRETARY OF STATE HAY.

MERIWETHER

Withdrew His Appeal and Will be Taken to Eddy-ville at Once.

Frank Meriwether, one of the negroes convicted of complicity in the Pembroke murder and given a life sentence at the spring term of court, withdrew his appeal and he will be taken to Eddyville either today or to-morrow to begin his term.

Dave Cunningham, col., who was also convicted last spring on a charge of grand larceny, but granted an appeal, failed to get the matter before the court within the time limit, and he, too, will be taken to Eddyville with Meriwether.

In the case in the Circuit Court of Spiegel Bourland by next friend against Dr. Walter Lackey for assault, in which the jury returned a verdict for $500.00, the court granted a new trial. Bourland was at the time of the assault confined at the Western Asylum as a lunatic, and the defendant, Dr. Lackey was the first assistant physician of that institution.

The motion for a new trial was vigorously argued and the Court was asked to give a reason if he had any for a new trial.

His opinion sustaining the motion was substantially as follows: "While I can't lay my hand on any particular reason for granting a new trial, it kinder runs in my mind that this verdict is wrong and I grant a new trial."

The appeal case of T. J. Guthrie against the city of Hopkinsville for amount of salary which plaintiff claimed to have lost on account of being quarantined during the small-pox epidemic, was decided in favor of plaintiff, and the latter was given a judgement for $24.

The motion for a new trial in the Annie May Brasher case in which she got a verdict for $300 against the Tennessee Central was overruled also the motion for a new hearing in the case of Brown against the Forbes Manufacturing Company in which there was a verdict for the defendant was also overruled.

Jim Holloway, who was convicted of manslaughter, in the killing of Andrew Bradshaw, another negro, near old Bellevue, about twenty-five years ago, and given eight years, was refused a new trial and the case will go to the court of appeals.

The following divorce suits were granted: Emma Wilson from Abner W. Wilson, A. Thomas Wiley from Hattie Wiley.

The case of W. H. Bickers against The Anchor Fire Insurance Company was dismissed, settled.

Sunday School Picnic.

The Baptist Sunday school will have a picnic next Friday, in Carroll's woods near the city, on the Clarksville pike.

Mrs. J. S. Brown and children, of Nashville, are visiting Mrs. C. F. Jarrett, on East Seventh street.

THE INVENTOR OF INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATIONS

"I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great Anniversary Festival. It ought to be commemorated, as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp, shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of the continent to the other from this time forward forever."

John Adams Foretold Our Noisy Celebrations

JOHN ADAMS, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and second President of the United States, was the staunch friend of the American boy. Not only did he believe it to be every boy's inalienable right, but his patriotic duty to burn his fingers with gunpowder and to deafen the populace with noises of all descriptions on the nation's natal day. That such was his belief is proven by the above extract from a letter written by him to his wife from Philadelphia on July 3, 1776, 24 hours before old Liberty Bell had proclaimed to an expectant nation that its representatives had thrown off the yoke of the tyrannical George III.

Thus it is that President Adams is the inventor of independence day celebrations. Thus it is that the American boy has his first and most prominent authority for his hilarious observance of this, the greatest day in our history. President Adams was a comparatively young man when he wrote this letter, being then but 41 years of age. He lived to be more than 90, and before his death saw this great day celebrated as he wished it celebrated over practically all of the civilized portion of the continent south of the Canadian line. His death occurred on July 4, 1826, and on the same day, and at almost the same hour, there died also Thomas Jefferson, a colleague of Adams on the committee which drafted the famous document declaring American Independence.

"Did they?" he queried.

"Yes, I was in the Hilton parlor when you invited them."

"You?" in astonishment.

"Yes, I went over to get the basket phantoms, as you called them, and I found them in the Hilton parlor."

"Back home? O, no, I planned as much with the Hiltons this morning."

"Why, I thought," said Rose Hilton, "that you had been to the Hiltons."

"I did not expect to see them to-day," said Ben, "and I was so busy with the Hiltons that I did not have time to go."

"I did not know," stammered he, "that you had been to the Hiltons."

"I have a part in the festivities. But, my dear Ben, it is no uncommon thing for lovers to quarrel before marriage, rest assured he will after, and I'll live with a Hottentot as a jealous husband."

"I have been a brute," said Tom, "and I will drive the canopy-top and you will go with me in the phaeton."

"Then the Hiltons know everything?" he looked at her in humiliation.

"You know why I could not come with you this morning," she said, evasively.

Ben sat down on the extreme end of the seat and wished he knew as much as the Hiltons, just then. But he would be thankful that they did not know all.

At this juncture the trio came upon a draggled and happy, carrying immense wreaths of water lilies, and were ready to go home.

"It has been such a jolly day!" exclaimed Rose, stringing a fragrant wreath on her arm and addressing Millie.

"Yes; everybody is so independently happy," answered Miss Radcliffe.

Ben looked at his lips and flushed to the roots of his hair. "Would he get to the finish of this before it finished him?"

"Fate," echoed Tom over Ben's head. "I've been having a fine time, too. When your aunt wanted the phaeton I thought we were done for; but when you sent Ben around, you let us all out, Miss Radcliffe."

"There's always a way out," put in Ben, catching at straws and hoping he was the son of a prophet at least.

But his remark had sounded extremely funny, for it was needed with a storm of applause. Tom went so far as to roll on the sward in his merriment, asking the girls to give three cheers for "the way out."

When the shadows lengthened and everybody was getting everybody else's dinner basket, the Hiltons fled up the canopy-top with themselves and their burden of lilies and rolled merrily homeward. The phaeton followed with a more sedate couple.

"Miller," said Ben, by and by, "were you sorrowing so because I broke your heart, dear?"

"O, no," answered she, quietly. "Aunt Minerva had a telegram yesterday that Uncle Abner was dead, and to come immediately. I thought a great deal of Uncle Abner."

"O, no," then you did not think of me?" chagrined in spite of himself.

"O, no; I thought you could take care of yourself, you were so independent," and she sighed complacently.

And Ben looked at her that he had come plump and knew "the finish," and had missed his dignity.

A Fourth of July Change of Heart

By BERTHA E. BUSH

ADORE children," said Miss Dairymple. "They are perfectly fascinating to me. I'd like nothing better than to have a child with me all the time."

She looked so pretty when she said it that I longed to fall on my knees before her. Miss Dairymple was the idol of my heart, but I was not happy, even in her society, for I had a rival. My rival was a little girl, a three-year-old child. As I saw the look of satisfaction that spread over her face at this remark, I ground my teeth. Why should she have such an advantage over me? I turned aside lest she should see my disturbance and in doing so I happened to glance at Miss Dean.

Miss Dean is Miss Dairymple's cousin, who is taking a rest after the rigors of a three-years' training as a nurse in a well-known hospital. I thought her a pleasant sort of a girl, although I did not approve of women's taking courses of any kind. To my mind their place is at home. But beside Miss Dairymple's glowing beauty, Miss Dean paled into utter insignificance. In truth it sometimes passed through my mind that my charmer kept this plain cousin beside her for the sake of the contrast. As Miss Dairymple went on telling of her love for children, I saw a peculiar look on Miss Dean's face. But an instant later I forgot all about it, for a blessed interruption carried off my latest rival, and my adored one, with her cousin, was promising to go to the great Fourth of July picnic in company with Alice.

I walked on wings the next few days. My only concern was a blissful anxiety to think of what would please my charmer best. At the door of my sister's house I had an inspiration.

"Bertha," I said, "I wish you would make Alice with me to the picnic."

Alice is my two-year-old niece. She is a beautiful child with great brown eyes, red cheeks and flaxen hair, as like a walking doll as can be imagined. Our acquaintance was not very extensive, for my sister had only lived in the city a few weeks, but already we were in love with each other.

A look of actual relief came over my sister's face. "Oh, John, I should be glad to do it," she said. "I want to go to the picnic with Alice."

What a howl! Who would have thought that such a noise could ever have proceeded from the mouth of so little a child! I shook her. She howled louder. Never was a young baby in more conspicuous and embarrassing position.

"Let me take her. I'll soon quiet her," said Miss Dean, and her voice was positively at that moment the sweetest sound I had ever heard.

I don't know what magic she used, but little Alice was soon sitting smiling and happy beside her and I was enjoying bliss by the side of my charmer. But somehow the bliss was a shade less blissful than before, and the low sweet voice that spoke to the child was heard through it all.

We had no more trouble with little Alice while Miss Dean was with us. Indeed, beyond the purchase of her package of candy and a toy balloon for her, I scarcely thought of the child. But in another hour Miss Dean went away on an errand, and then my trials began. I had looked forward to this season with my beloved with only the unconscious child as a witness ever since the expedition was planned. Had thought that at last I would find an opportunity to offer her my heart and hand. But had sweet baby Alice been so intelligent a demon, she could not have interfered more with my purpose. In five minutes after Miss Dean had left, she had streaked her white dress with dust stains and candy juice from top to bottom. Her face was worse than her dress and her hands were worse than hers. Yet she insisted on retaining Miss Dairymple's dainty lavender gown and my once immaculate skirt-front with them incessantly.

I wished that baby's face with my best hand-worked handkerchief ten times in the next hour, with no permanent effect save that the contrast between the few minutes before Miss Dean's return. In three minutes I had forgotten everything else.

A puff! A bang! A shriek! People were running toward a corner of the park. There had been an explosion of a toy cannon. Where was Baby Alice? I searched frantically here and everywhere. No sign of her, although the murmur of "A baby hurt!" filled me with dismay.

At last I found her and she was the victim. She was in a policeman's arms.

I rushed to her side, and she was screaming lustily.

My heart was torn with pity. I saw that she was in pain. I tried to comfort her, but she only screamed more loudly.

I called for a doctor. A nurse came. They tried to soothe her, but she only screamed more loudly.

Our Declarations

8 times passes critics and cautions assail the bit of literature sacred to the good American, call the document "Whiggish" in origin, and simplicity Englishmen speak of it as a very one-sided article, and this last is most amusing of all the available of blame that has befallen the words signed that July day some 123 years ago; conditions were not such one could much more "magnify" then. But we have the judgment of a careful student, a man that, from the distance of years, is able to judge calmly and fairly.

Prof. Moses Colt Tyler, meeting the charge of lack of originality, says that of course the document was a reiteration of the phraseology of the people for the preceding 12 years, during which period the colonies were hitherto with the injustice and indifference of the mother country. The phraseology thus characteristic of it (the declaration) is the very phraseology of the champions of constitutional expansion.

Prof. Moses Colt Tyler, meeting the charge of lack of originality, says that of course the document was a reiteration of the phraseology of the people for the preceding 12 years, during which period the colonies were hitherto with the injustice and indifference of the mother country. The phraseology thus characteristic of it (the declaration) is the very phraseology of the champions of constitutional expansion.

Ben Easton's Fourth

By MANDA L. CROCKER

E stepped lightly into the two-wheeled canopy-top, and, flicking a bit of dust from his sleeve, took up the ribbons with a lordly hand. "I'll show Miss Millie a trick!" It seemed there was more emphasis than was necessary. "I'll show her that it is independence day in more ways than one!"

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How to Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or floating indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It cures inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or had effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine, you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Birmingham, N. Y. When you write, mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and the address, Birmingham, N. Y.

FLIGHT OF AIRSHIP.

Daring Feat Performed by Inventor at Toledo.

Toledo, July 30.—One of the most remarkable flights ever made in an airship was performed yesterday by A. R. Knabenshue, who sailed through the air a distance of three miles, landed on the top of a ten-story office building in twenty-five minutes from the time of starting and then returned to the depot from which he started.

The day was ideal for the daring feat. A light wind was blowing from the east and Knabenshue sailed his aerial craft directly in the face of the wind. Two days ago he declared he would sail down town and alight on the top of a ten-story building. When he left the starting place he directed the ship straight for the city. When half the distance had been covered an upper current of air carried him up to a distance of 3,000 feet. But the nervy driver did not lose control of his machine for a moment and steered it directly for the heart of the city.

The streets were entirely suspended, and the entire population gathered in the crowds to watch the course of the ship. When directly over the sky-scaper Knabenshue directed his craft downward and alighted on the building with the grace of a bird.

A round of applause greeted the daring navigator, who was less excited than any of the spectators. After examining the ship to see that it was all right, and receiving congratulations from his friends, Knabenshue started on his trip back, and going in the face of the wind he made the return voyage in fifteen minutes. He declares his present ship is far superior to others he has navigated; that it is easier to manage, and that he has solved the problem of aerial navigation.

THE JURY'S VERDICT.

BY JAMES J. REILLY.

(Copyright, 1905 by W. G. Chapman.)
It was a hot, sultry day in June and Judge D. C. Clark's court room was crowded with court attendants, reporters and curiosity seekers, the unusually large crowd being attracted by the report that John Dickinson, professional burglar, was to be placed on trial, charged with having committed a daring burglary. A jury was easily secured, but it was generally believed that the trial would last several days, for old John Thornton, who was to defend the prisoner, had the reputation of being a fighter and the prosecution expected that he would make a stubborn fight for his client.

When the first witness for the state had been duly examined and turned over to the defense for cross-examination, the prosecution was surprised when Thornton arose and said that the defense had no questions to ask. He declined to cross-examine any of the witnesses, and after the state had rested its case he arose, and addressing the court, stated that the defense had no evidence to offer. The prisoner's case looked hopeless for the evidence against him was conclusive and his bad record would doubtless result in a heavy sentence. In his opening address the prosecuting attorney made a masterly effort, and after he had finished things looked blacker than ever. His clean-shaven, intelligent face and long, snow-white hair always created a deep impression, and so great was the expectancy that a plea out of the ordinary was about to be made that a pin could have been heard to fall in the crowded court room.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he began, his clear melodious voice expressing deep emotion, "the evidence against my client is overwhelming. Although I insist that he is innocent you may believe him guilty; but, gentlemen, before you find this man guilty, let me relate to you a true and touching tale."

"On a cold and stormy evening last winter when the thermometer registered below zero and the streets were almost impassable because of the deep snow, which was still falling, whirling and drifting with cyclonic fury, a young man might have been seen trudging westward toward his home on Washington boulevard, Chicago. He had passed Haind street and was struggling onward in the blinding storm when he stumbled against a young girl who was apparently bewildered and in deep distress. He excused himself and was about to pass on, but the forlorn, tear-stained face of the girl attracted his attention, and the curiosity asked if he could be of any service to her. Instinctively the girl felt that she had met a friend and in a few words she told him that she was without money or friends and had no place to go in all the great city. Her youthful appearance—she was only 16—and her great, sorrowful eyes, touched the heart of the stranger, and without any hesitation he told her to come with him and he would give her shelter and protection. They trudged on a few blocks further and entered a house where the stranger lived, and in a few minutes the now thoroughly exhausted girl was seated before a cheerful fire in a small, neatly furnished room, while the stranger told her she was the only home he had."

"After he had made her as comfortable as he could he left the room and returned with a kind-hearted, motherly woman to whom he repeated the girl's story, also telling her that his little sister was to occupy his room and board at the house until he could do something for her."

"Then, gentlemen of the jury, this noble-hearted fellow turned over to the landlady nearly every dollar he had in his pocket to pay for the keeping of his little charge and then went out in that black and stormy night to secure shelter for himself in a cheap lodging house on the west side. Three days later, having learned that the young girl he had befriended had been taken to a police station, he purchased a ticket, put her on a train and sent her back to her parents, whose joy at the return of their supposedly lost daughter can better be imagined than expressed. The father tried to find the stranger who had treated his child with such touching kindness and charity, but he had disappeared and was swallowed up in the teeming thousands of the great city; but, gentlemen of the jury, I have found him. He is here in this room, and he is none other than this much abused and innocent man, John Dickinson, accused burglar."

This is the man whose Christian charity revived a man's faith in humanity and whose name, although tainted on earth, is whispered in heaven. Yes, John Dickinson, the world may frown on you, but in the name of the mothers and daughters of the great city I extend to you my hand and am proud to call you my friend!

"Gentlemen of the jury, I appeal to you to extend to this accused man the mercy and charity he so generously extended to a poor, homeless, homeless girl on the streets of Chicago."

A silence still as death pervaded the court room as the old lawyer sat down. The state's attorney made no move to controvert the case and the court's instructions to the jury were scarcely audible. The jury fled out, and returned in about a quarter of an hour with a verdict of "not guilty." There was a murmur of approval from the crowd, but they did not know that the father of the girl was the husband of the jury.
